Hongrond, January 21st, 1871. THE Lecture delivered by the Royd, Mr EITELL at Union Church, throws valuable light upon the question of religious teaching in China. Nothing can tend more to give experienced commonly by a bridegroom shortforce and power to the efforts of Missionuries ly before his marriage, or by a convict prethan their making the religion already existing among the people, whom they desire to convert, a subject of deep and earnest study: This, Mr. Errent has evidently done, in a lis to travel, and who has visited nearly every broad and liberal spirit, frankly admitting part of the world, thinks little of embarking the existence of much that is beautiful and or of arriving in a new country. His great attractive in the Buddhistic system. No one events must be greater than these, and it not with the thoroughly Christian spirit in which of life is taken off, simply for want of some-insensibility. He rallied sufficiently to disclose of the Pali dislect of Sanscrit which he does not under. Count Bernstroff did not propose to Lord with which he does not under. Hundley, and A. O. Gutierrez served as jurures. Stand. Then the interests of a "benevolent the far less pictures que plaine, with a feeling these things are the purest nonsense, but if is Christianity upon the minds and under ture and debarkation, just as in a more mostandings of those, to whom it has been notonous state of things one looks forward taught, he gave a practical illustration of truly Christian Charity in recognising enjoyment, and repose of every day precise. that " Buddhism 'has fulfilled a great mission, which it was appointed to fulfill under the providence of God," and his class-work to the play-ground, every day high in the floor, which was a substitute for a (now muster of us, a sympathy of the imagination. The remarks which he made are suggestive of a consideration which is often very much overlooked in our dealings with the Chinese. We are apt to hold with religious feeling at too low an estimate. Such a system is therefore well worthy of careful study on the part of Missionaries, who may very often find that it is better to discover what there is in jet that is good, and work upon the maines from such points as are truthful and moral, than to condemn this whole, and moral than to condemn this whole, and the maines of the mai ristics. "No one," once said a cynical writer " is sufficiently tolerant to tolerate intolorance." Perhaps it may be claimed for Buddhism that it is the one religion which will enable men to do this. Resting upon the it is content to take high ground upon minor consolation of the human heart. Perhaps in a system such as this a greater opposition by some of the best authorities on the subject, that few Chinese converts remain true to Christianity when they return to their own ration upon the actual fact. It is not improbable that in many instances what is good in both. It is a curious fact that some of the Chinese are fully aware of the points of similarity between Buddhism and Ohristianity; and it is a question of the greatest interest whether a thorough knowledge of where the two religious converge would not enable the Missionary to wean the those are ideas are not unmixed with error. In the wholesale condemnation of the reliheathens and idolaters, the Missionary may often be contemning doctrines and creeds which, little as he imagines it, are in substance identical with his own. LOOKING FORWARD. Of course everybody looks forward. That is axiomatic. Everyone has some sort of object, and he looks to attain his object sooner or later. According as it appears more or less remote, his thoughts less or more constantly revert to it. It is supposed by himself and all who are in his secret to be the main-spring of his life, and whether or not he regulates all his plans consistently by t, at any rate he always looks forward to it longs for it, expects it. But it is not this grand looking forward to one definite goal that has suggested the present remarks. Life is composed of lookings forward, and not only of the looking forward to the ultimate object, but of innumerable subsidiary expectations, without which life would be a bald, monotonous existence. The man who goes to work on a regular plan to achieve the pet object of his life, and cares for nothing less, and looks forward to none of those things of the immediate morrow which render the work of to-day pleasing by very anti-cipation of contrast, if he has any existence beyond the boards of a novel or the ideas of its author, certainly cannot be said to live in any appropriate sense of the term. The man who lives looks forward from day to day and from hour to hour, and the man who thus looks forward lives. In a life of comparative monotony the most trivial incidents are looked forward to with all the sense of eager expectation which is experienced in the antiipation of more important events in a life of change. The prisoner who has been confined for years to one cell thinks of scarcely anything from one day to another save the time of his warder's visit. These are the events of his life, and if any greater event should be about to happen to him, he would look for it with a proportionate increase of anxiety. If his gaoler should tell him a week beforehand that he should be removed to a now cell on such a day, as that day approached he would feel all the fluttering sensations viously to his execution. But as the general mode of existence becomes varied the smaller whom they had bought their pistols, which were events lose their importance and the greater take their place. A man whose business it unfrequently happens that such men become with the thoroughly Christian spirit in which of life is taken off, simply for want of someto every day's work, to every day's enjoyments. to every day's repose, although the work, ly resemble those of the day preceding. A school boy looks forward in the midst of woman told him Swan had fallen down a square of face is acquired; the inevitable pipe; mole had completed their voyage immolested; and together by a tie which we can only describe witchcraft in sterner days have long since vanwith the same sensations; but once in seven days he has a cessation from the class-work
